THE GAS TAX AND LICENSE FEES

Delegation representing the Alberta Motor Association waited on the Provincial Government to protest against the proposed addition of a cent a gallon to the gasoline tax.

The protest may be successful. Taxation is being levied in three ways where it is thought the motorist can be got without too fine regard to other considerations. And where the tax is levied in three ways, the gasoline tax has produced a "cheap" of provincial revenue in years gone by. At least the motorist should be considered that this tax may have worked for all it is worth, and that to impose the extra cent would result in less "gas" being bought and less revenue coming in.

The delegation stated that more revenue could be got by abolishing the rebate that is allowed on gasoline bought for industrial use. The figures are convincing on that point. But more convincing still would be the "kick" registered by the farmers if they were told they must pay the full tax on gasoline bought for tractor use. Farmers who would not out, is not a profitable business just now.

There is a sound case for a substantial reduction in the license fee for the motorist to be raised. These fees are absurdly high at present. They are higher than in many states where cars can be driven to advantage all the year. In the United States, Alberta is only about half the price. Those who drive at other times do their driving in town or on country roads. They do not need the license of a license for the owner who only drive when weather and roads are really suitable, hinders the sale of cars, and discourages their use.

NOT ANY FOR THEM

From Sydney comes a despatch saying Australian grain men refuse to consider seriously Washington's suggestion that the great wheat exporting countries make an agreement to restrict production. Farm leaders there describe the scheme as "fantastic and impracticable."

Australia is making money growing wheat. That makes the difference. The Australians defied the unit value of their currency, instead of allowing everything else to rise to meet it. They would rather reduce to admit that what was a pound three years ago is two or three pounds now in purchasing power but only a pound in debasing power. With them a pound is still a pound, and counts as a pound in buying or paying.

As a result Australian growers are getting twice as much for their wheat as Canadian growers, and are prospering themselves and paying their debts, public and private, out of earnings more nearly on a level with their earnings in the United States. Prices and wages have been stabilized and the disastrous effects of a general slump minimized.

In Canada we have killed the value of everything else in order to make wheat worth more dollars—or try it. The Australians refused to turn themselves for a theory, elected to abandon the gold pound and make their money out of wheat and wheat values. Hence wheat is worth growing in Australia.

There is not much cause to wonder that Australian growers are not anxious to join an international pool to crimp their own business and cut their profits. That kind of a self-denying ordinance looks senseless appeal. They have the world wheat trade "dead to rights" and intend to hold their advantage. They would be foolish if they didn't.

WHAT AILS U.S. BANKS?

It has been often said that Canadian banks would be more useful to the business interests of the country if our banking system were re-modelled on the United States plan.

The local bank, managed by a local banker, prospered or did not prosper according to the amount of business it can do in the particular community in which it is located. It must make money there, by lending money there, or make none in prospering bankruptcies.

Highly or worse than industrial development has taken place in the United States has been largely credited to a banking system that completed the local banks and encouraged them to turn their money on the success of local industrial and business enterprises.

That has happened during the last two years, culminating in the nation-wide bank holiday, bringing out the other side of the case. As the local banks prospered with local business concerns thrived, thousands of them had gone bankrupt, or into suspension, with loss to shareholders, depositors and stockholders alike, before President Roosevelt closed up the lot.

The first duty of a bank is to the people who hold it money. That is to those who deposit their savings with it.

The branch bank system in Canada makes our banks distinctly depositors' banks, in that they are given full opportunities to protect those to whom they are indebted. The local bank system of the United States makes the banks of that country depositors' banks, in that they are given full opportunities to protect those to whom they are indebted. The local bank system of the United States makes the banks of that country depositors' banks, in that they are given full opportunities to protect those to whom they are indebted.

Poems That Live

THE DEAREST POETS

Were I to name, out of the times gone by,
The poets dearest to me, I should name
Pleiades for spirits, and a fine, free way;
Pleiades for manners, and close silent eyes;
Milton for the noble, and a last strong high;
Spenser for luxury, and a soft, soft day;
Horse for chatting with, from day to day;
Shakespeare for all, but most of all;
But which take with me, I cannot say;
Shakespeare—long as I live unexpressed
With the world's weight, making sad thoughts
And but I wish, out of the common run
To lay a wounded heart in lovely rain.
And to lay things for old and healing—
Spenser.

SIDE GLANCES - By George Clark

January, 1912. I was sitting in my office, waiting over the monetary depression. I had a conversation with a Vancouver publisher. He wondered what could be done.

I suggested that he advocate in his paper a domestic currency, backed by the credit of the nation, pointing out that this would permit trade without the loss of time and money in making drafts, and affecting the value of the gold-backed dollar for international settlements. I offered to write him an article to donate him a copy of the paper.

He thought for about five seconds and said, "It couldn't be done."

On the same day I discussed the suggestion with a lawyer who was leaving the next day for Montreal to do some business with the head office of one of the Canadian banks. He thought there might be something in the idea.

The day after President Roosevelt ordered the issuance of a scrip in the United States, in order to allow the banks to open again, I met my lawyer friend. He said, "Do you remember a year or so ago suggesting a domestic currency for Canada? When I reached Montreal I met the president and the general manager of the — Bank. They remarked on the trying times we were going through, and said they were what was going to happen. At this time I made the suggestion that what Canada needed was a domestic currency, backed by the credit of the nation. I hadn't finished the sentence before they both said with voice cried out 'can't be done.'"

I got five seconds more consideration from my man than did he. Now we both have the satisfaction of seeing it done. The nation that has half of the monetary gold of the world is in the vaults.

"It can't be done." That's what they told Galileo and Columbus.

Considering the general ignorance, even among very literate folk, about currency matters, it's astounding to find how very clear and helpful are the ideas of some folk whose work in life has not brought them closely into contact with commerce, currency and banking.

From Davidson, Alberta, comes a lengthy letter, brimful of suggestions from Mr. George O. Wallis. The firm handwriting deceived me into thinking it was from a business man in middle life. He turns out to be a farmer, 35 years of age, who spent 30 years of his life in front-finding, ship building and mining engineering. Thirty years he has been on the staff of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Canadian Federation of Shipbuilders and Engineers in England.

Commenting on the doctrine of the technocrats that the wealth of a country consists of its natural resources in materials and energy, Mr. Wallis points out that the technocrats are not intelligent with its natural resources recently enhanced by the discovery of silver and radium.

Mr. Wallis expects to use our silver in making bank notes, and is urging that not merely Canada, but the British Empire, stand to greatly gain by minting silver. He points out that in addition to the immediate profit to the state of a great silver coinage, it would open the way for permanent trade development with the Oriental and distant countries, with their billion populations.

He suggests that in making such a desirable extension of national currency, Britain should also adopt a system of coinage and weights and measures. The marvel is with such a Tower of Babel system of money and measurements, that British trade managers as well as our own.

Canada, with a new silver coinage, stands at Bear Lake, has special reason for minting silver. I have heard nothing of the kind in Ontario or Montreal that has the vigor of mind, clearness of perception or promise of benefits, that has come out of the existing currency crisis, that compares with this contribution from a prairie farmer.

There's a four-star film showing on the screen called "The Silver Dollar." It will provide even the least intelligent with an understanding of the value of the education of others. "Silver Dollar" is merely the name given by Yale Miner, miner and founder of Denver, to a diamond which is not essential to the story. The real story is of the rise to silver wealth of the miner and storekeeper who becomes mayor, governor, senator, banker and statesman, without any knowledge of financial currents.

He builds an opers house as a gift to the town, he is heard saying that he is not a politician, and his palace home. Even when the young newspaper editor, William Jennings Bryan comes to interview the miner, he does not get out of his bank, but influence procure the denouncing of silver.

Silver is silver; if it goes down in price, hell produce more.

The tragedy which collapses his bank, ruins his health and brings him to his end, is the tragedy of ignorance. He can't see from whence the hand comes that strikes him down and takes away his all. To the tragedy of ignorance, "I can't see the hand." With his eyes closed he begs his wife to hold onto the mine, and they'll be buried in caskets of silver.

OLD-TIMER.

Proverb.

The trial of the "Bill to Reform the Coinage and Mint Laws" may never be known. Forgery is suspected for there was no motion of denouncing silver in the bill before Congress.

Senator Sherman who moved its adoption in the Senate said, "This bill will not probably consume more time than the time consumed in reading it."

When asked by Senator Sherman of California if the bill would be read, the speaker would afford the free coinage of silver, Sherman replied (according to the Senate record) "It provides for coin which is exactly interchangeable with the English silver in the bill before Congress."

Not a word was spoken to indicate that silver was being denominated. The bill passed the U.S. Senate without a roll call, or even voting against it. The Associated Press announced:

"The mintage and coinage bill that passed the Senate this afternoon is a codification of all existing laws on the subject."

President Grant signed the bill without reading it. Thinking it was a mere codification measure, he said that he had been told it was to be denominated silver, he would not have signed it. His true nature was not known till three years later, in some quarters it was said that forgery was used to accomplish the purpose.

OLD-TIMER.

The effect of the bill was to double the value of all gold and silver coins and deposits, and the value of property and products just as it has done.

Health and Diet Advice

By Dr. Frank McCoy

EXCESSIVE INTERNAL GAS OFTEN SERIOUS

An excessive amount of stomach and intestinal gas is common to about 80 per cent of all people complain of it, yet this symptom is largely ignored by medical books. A certain amount of gas in the alimentary tract is necessary to the health of the person is untroubled by it, but when gas is formed to such an extent that it causes pain, discomfort or bloating, it is a sign of a longer manner and the cause should be ascertained.

When the gas collects into large pockets we find that the patient has various distressing symptoms, such as an excessive fullness, sharp colicky pain, rumbling noises, belching, the passing of foul-smelling gases, bloated feeling, etc. If the gas is in the upper part of the stomach and is present against the heart, the patient is likely to suffer from a choking feeling, and has a shortness of breath and a palpitation or too-rapid beating of the heart.

The worst gas attacks usually occur during the night and nightmares, sleeplessness and a fluttering of the heart which makes the hours of darkness seem miserable and intolerable. The pressure of the fingers may give rise to pain. When much gas is present the abdomen may be similar to a balloon which has been blown up hard. Those who have digestive troubles, who are suffering from the trouble is often due to excessive pressure from gas and that as soon as the gas is passed, the abdomen feels better.

The most common foods which are likely to produce flatulence when wrongly combined are the vegetables, when undigested starches, indigestible starches, and an excessive amount of meat, especially beef, and an excessive amount of fat.

Many causes of gas

Some of the causes of excessive gas are: Wrong food combinations, eating too rapidly, eating when tired, drinking too much, eating too much, a bad habit of swallowing air without knowing it, and the use of foods which are gas-forming in the stomach, such as beans, peas, cabbage, melons, peaches, onions and garlic.
